

Cognitive behavioural formulation of an anxiety presentation

A 70-year-old woman had suffered a stroke four months ago and had made a good recovery. She made repeated presentations to A&E with headaches, light headedness and facial tingling expressing concerns about a further stroke. Standard medical workup and imaging and hospital discharge letters attributed her symptoms to anxiety. She had reported frequent episodes beginning with a headache which she believed were a recurrent stroke.

